Known as the "Old Man of the desert" or the "Batholith man", the fossil consists of a complete human skeleton with a halo-like calcite deposit at the head. The find is just the second oldest fossils of a human skeleton ever found and marks an important milestone in the development of human evolution. "This is one of the most important and most exciting finds of the last decade" said Dr. Samuel M. Keller, senior researcher of the team that discovered the fossil. "We have known since the 18th century that Early Human fossils existed, but nobody knew exactly where in the world they came from," he said. "This is the first site where Early Human remains are found in the Old World—the home of modern humans. It is the best evidence yet for the monogenetic origin of these early humans." The first wave of humans For the researchers to come to this conclusion, they had to establish a firm connection between the ancient skull and the rest of the skeleton. "This is impossible to prove if the specimen was buried as a mere grave-good. A common practice in Asia during historic periods, the skull is often kept as a memento of its owner, often in a pot," Dr. Keller said. "With the bones of the cave lion, we could demonstrate the history of the cave environment. But in the case of the Old Man of the desert skull,

I have a problem about the proof of the equivalence between the definition of a measure of convergence and the definition of a measure of divergence. The definition of a measure of convergence is that the measure of the convergence is greater than or equal to zero or the measure of divergence is equal to zero. The proof given in my book says: Let E be the set of all positive real numbers, let {Pn} be a sequence of subsets of E, and let Fn be a sequence of complex numbers. The author gives the following condition: Let Fn diverges if for each $n \in N$, we have $\lim_{n\to\infty}| Fn|\leq 1$. And let Fn converges to a number c, if $\lim_{n\to\infty}| Fn|>1$. Now, he proves that divergence implies convergence. Consider the sequence Fn+1=Fn+1. Thus, n=0 is the smallest number in the sequence. So, $\lim_{n\to\infty}(Fn+1)=0$. As Fn+1 diverges, therefore Fn+1 is a sequence of complex numbers such that for each $n \in N$, we have $\lim_{n\to\infty}|Fn+1|\leq 1$. I don't understand the "in that case, Fn+1 is a sequence of complex numbers such that... ". Could anyone explain how is this line of thinking? A: Consider the set of all real numbers, let F_n be the sequence of all integers larger than n, $F_n=\{k\in \mathbb{Z} : k \geq n\}$, and consider $c
